

Howe refuses to condemn Reagan

American consultation with Britain Grenada invasion was over the "regrettably less than we could have wished", Sir Geoffrey Howe told MPs during an emergency debate yesterday, but he refused to condemn the United States. Mr Denis Healey said the Prime Minister had been President Reagan's obedient poodle.

The Cuban Government announced that Cuban resistance on the island had ended, but the Pentagon said this could not be confirmed. The 3,000strong invasion force had faced stiff resistance throughout the day. At least 30 Cubans were killed in fighting at the airport.

American students trapped on the island sent a radio appeal for food. Their message was picked up by a radio ham in Miami. Sixty-one Ameri-cans, the first to be evacuated, were flown to Charleston. The State Department announced that Sir Paul Scoon, the Governor-General, was safe.

The Soviet Union condemned the invasion as a crime against humanity. At the United Nations, Washington faced a chorus of condemnation. Mexico opened the debate at the Security Council with a fierce censure of the United States.

The Barbados Prime Minister, Mr Thomas Adams, said the Caribbean countries proposed to establish a sixmonth transition period on Grenada, during which elections would be held. The Army would be disbanded.

Andropov > threat to break off arms talks

From Richard Owen Moscow

President Andropov last night issued an altimatum to the West nver the deadlocked Geneva talks na medium range missiles, saying that if Natn went ahead with the deplayment of croise and Pershing 2 in December, the talks would be broken off. Mr Andropov, who has not appeared in public for mnre than two months, made his move in an interview with Prarda released in advance by Tass and read nn Moscow television. He himself did not oppear.

He nffered a "new flexihility" at the talks na medium range launchers and nuclear-capable aircraft. "Snme people ask what the Soviet Union will do if to ensure equality of warheads possessed by the Soviet Union on one side and Britain and France on the other we are compelied to have a smaller number of missile launchers than Nato. Well, we are prepared for this," Mr Andropov said.

He also offered "equal total levels of medium-range delivery aircraft in a mntually acceptable quantitative range", noting that this differed "substantially" from previous Soviet positions.

He said that Russia had observed a moratorium oa SS20 deployment in European Russia - something the West disputes - and added that if an agreement was reached at Geneva, Moscow would also cease deployment of SS20s in the Far East.

The Geneva talks could continue if Nato deployments did not start. But the appearance of new American missiles would make "continuation of the present talks impossible".

He said that cruise and Pershing 2 would "sharply alter the strategic situation" in Europe to Nato's advantage. If his offer on delivery vehicles was takeo up, Russia would be left with abort 140 SS20 launchers, "noticeably less" than those of Britain and France.

disquiet in the provinces. The meeting had before it a motion from one of the leading campaigners for change, Mr Stanley Best.

A big majority of speakers favoired the change, but when it came to a vote the motion was defeated by 225 to 170. Penalties will not prevent councils breaking cash limits, survey concludes

The scheme for penalizing councils that our predicament arises next year's spending targets or curb rate rises.

That conclusion emerges from a preliminary survey of budgets by The Times, which discovered that many Conservative as well as Labour councils are planning to spend more than they have been allowed for 1984-85.

Councils blame the Government for likely rate rises next year. Tomorrow Lord Bellwin, Minister for Local Government, meets the first of a long line of angry Tory authorities.

This time it is Buckinghamshire, labelled as spendthrift and facing a rates increase next April of 24 per cent, which is to complain that Whitehall has made no allowance for the expanding population of Milto Keynes that has pushed up the cost of its services.

Mr Roger Parker-Jervis, the county council chairman, said that without a government penalty there need be oo rates rise at all. "Our geat regret is that we are still categorized as over-spenders when all the Government's new evidence shows we are not and next year and see their rates will not stop them exceeding solely from the Government's of rate-support grant. failure to take account of our very rapid population growth."

The Government's targets have embarrassed even such loyally Tory counties as Kent and Surrey. Both are making efforts to cut their spending but are still likely to be spending more than their target.

In Tory suburban areas the situation is more acute. If Richmond upon Thames merely continues spending at its pro-sent level it would next year be 8.9 per cent above its limit, resulting in a huge penalty equivalent to adding 51.8 pence to the borough's rate.

In Bexley, an official said the Tory majority "has a long way to go to get down to target". In Waltham Forest, ecconomies of £5m are being sought in order to avoid harsh grant penalties, but the ruling Conservatives depend on Liberals for their majority and will find agree-ment oo cuts difficult.

It si certain that most rises of more than twice the 3 pushed upwards because of loss If Humberside continues its present policies it will lose £53m in grants. Its Labour majority is working ona plan to cut a large amount from its budger, but will still face penalties of £25m, equivalent to 26p on the rates.

> The problems faced by Labour city councils are huge. If the London Borough of Green-wich merely maintained its present patern of spending it could lose all its rate-support grant, which could entail a rate rise of at least 80 per cent. Similar figures apply in other Labour areas in London.

One effect of the new penalty scheme has quickly become apparent. There will be intense pressure in coming mooths to hold back the level of pay settlements for local authority employees, including teachers, But a county official said yesterday that police and firenen have already secured Labour-controlled authorities per cent level implied in the will oversshoot their targets rate-support grant figures.

By Anthony Bevins Political Correspondent Mr Neil Kinnock, the Labour leader, yesterday demanded and won the expulsion of Mr Tariq Ali from, the party on the ground that he was still a revolutionary socialist.

The party national executive voted 14-9 for Mr Ali's expulsion, two years after the former leading member of the International Marxist Group had joined the Hornsey con stituency party in London.

Mr Eric Heffer, the new party chairman, disclosed later that the executive had also rejected a plea from Mr Ali that it should give him a timetable after which his membership might be acceptable.

Mr James Mortimer, the cneral secretary, reported: The burden of Mr Kunnock's central argument was that Mr Tariq Ali held an ideology, that of revolutionary socialism; which was incompatible with the principles of the Labour Party, which is committed to the winning of a parliamentary majority and the use of Parliament as the instrument of social change".

But Mr Ali, who was allowed a six-minute appeal to executive members before they voted him out, told them that he had joined the party in good faith.

He told The Times. in advance of the vote: "I do think that it would be unjust if they denied me the right to join the party when tens of thousands of Travel firm pays £9,300 after hotel 'nightmare'

HOME NEWS

A winter skiing holiday turned into a nightmare for two turned into a nightmare for two dozen dentists, doctors, and nurses, Deputy Judge Sir Douglas Frank, QC, was told in the High Court yesterday. Their stay in Italy went "disastrously wrong" when the 24 holidaymakers, who worked at the London Hospital, White-chanel were crammed into chapel, were crammed into seven rooms, their counsel, Mr James Wadsworth, QC, said. The food advertised in the Blue Sky Holidays brochure with the words "Molto bene. We don't have to tell you how good Italian food is", was in fact "little short of appalling", Mr Wadsworth said.

Breakfast at the hotel, La Chapelle, at Jouvenceaux, on the French-Italian border, consisted of one cup of coffee and one croissant, with a rather rude reply if more food was asked for

There was no hot water, no adequate locks on flie bedroom doors, no bar, and facilities in the hotel annex for guests to supply their own food or drink, Mr Wadsworth said.

The holidaymakers sued Blue Sky Holidays, who denied they were liable to pay back the £3,734 costs of the holiday in Tanuary, 1980.

Later, after talks out of court, Blue Sky agreed to pay the holidaymakers £9,300, to include damages and legal costs. On that basis, the judge "stayed" the legal proceedings. The action was brought by Mr Anthony Clough, of Pickwick Avenue, Chelmstord, Es-sex, and Mr Andrew Palmer, now of Broomfield Hospital, Chelmsford, both dentists, who organized the trip.

Mr Wadsworth alleged that Blue Sky knew before the group left for Italy that the hotel manager had absconded with a arge sum of money, and had operated a fraud involving overbooking. As a result, rooms were not available.

Blue Sky

Mr Wadsworth said the holiday brochure promised that if the accommodation advertised could oot be provided the money would be refunded or another comparable holiday offered.

Mr Clough, giving evidence, said the party arrived at the hotel amid chaos.

He and his wife shared a small room which cootained four beds with a doctor and his wife. The following days were disastrous, Mr Clough said. At the start of the second week, he and his wife moved to the annex, to find it poorly lit,

Army acknowledges needs for journalism

The essence of successful warfare is secrecy and the recipe for successful journalism is publicity, but the two concepts used not be mutually exclusive, according to the Army's top public relations official.

"We acknowledge these imperatives exist, but we also acknowledge this gap has to be bridged", Brigadier. David Ramsbotham told journalists. Outlining his ideas about the treatment of war correspondents, he said that there was: No absolute right to know, but no absolute right to supress; an absolute right to ask question absolute right to ask questions, but an absolute right to refose to answer provided a reason is given.

Brigadier Ramsbotham bitterly criticized a report that war reporting involves a clash over press freedom. He said he had remonstrated with the defence correspondent of The Guardian for making the suggestion. "We are not at all concerned with a row over press freedom". He hoped that the exercise would canble journalists to see "the imperatives that operate on as in trying to protect the security of our operations and the people involved and why they are necessary". The Ministry of Defence believed an operational com-mander had the right to ask for protection of his operation and the people involved by controlling the time of release of operational information.

Crisis in the Caribbean: Decision to use force earns widest disapproval

Delight in Kremlin as attacks mount on gunboat diplomacy

From Trever Fishlock, New York

The invasion of Grenada a new set of international and domestic problems for the Reagan Administration.

The American action - the first time the United States has used force in the region to achieve political objectives since President Johnson sent 21,000 troops to the Dominican Republic in 1965 - has been condemned as gunboat diplo-macy by a number of Latin American allies. Taxes and food prices to go up in Sweden

From Christopher Mosey Stockholm

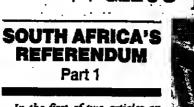

In a mini-budget intended to cut public spending by £500m, Sweden's Socialist Government yesterday raised taxes, cut food subsidies and froze foreign aid.

The last measure means that, Sweden for the first time since 1975, will fall next year below its stated goal of giving 1 per cent of gross national product (GNP) in aid to the Third World. Aid will remain at roughly this year's level of £612m

Mr Olof Palme, the Prime Minister, said the 1 per cent goal was unattainable be-cause of Sweden's economic difficulties. Fnreign aid was being financed by loans from abroad and any increase would endanger domestic reforms, hitting the poorer sections of Swedish society. He pointed out that Sweden would still meet the United Natinns aid goal nf 0.5 per cent of GNP.

For the nrdinary Swede, the mini-budget means an all-round ocrease in the cost of living. All basic fnodstuffs, except for milk, will go up in price as subsidies are withdrawn. The price nf a oew car will rise on average hy £100 and there will be approximately 20p more nn the cost nf a bottle of wine and £1.20 nn spirits (a bottle of VAT 69 at present costs £13.27 in the state nff-licences).

Dental and medical charges will be increased

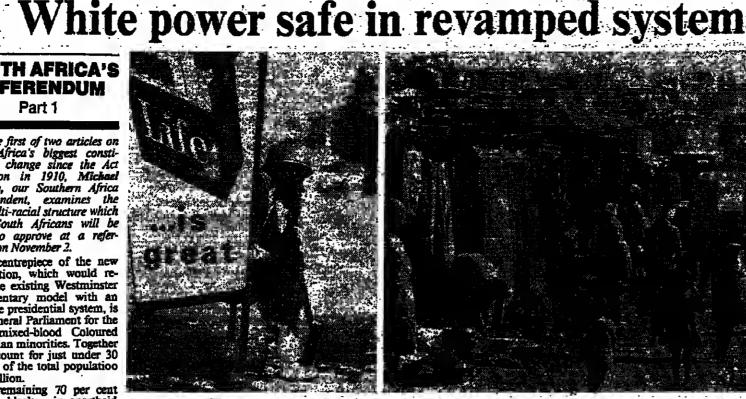

In the first of two articles on South Africa's biggest consti-tutional change since the Act of Union in 1910, Michael Horneby, our Southern Africa correspondent, examines the new multi-racial structure which white South Africans will be asked to approve at a referendum on November 2.

The centrepiece of the new constitution, which would replace the existing Westminster parliamentary model with an elaborate presidential system, is a tri-cameral Parliament for the white, mixed-blood Coloured and Indian minorities. Together they account for just under 30 per cent of the total populatioo of 29 million.

The remaining 70 per cent whn are black - in apartheid parlance, a term applied only to Negroes - will continue to have to look for their political fulfilment to the fragmented tribal "homelands", which Pretoria woold have the outside world accept as separate states. They occupy less then 14 per cent of the South African land

All hlacks are regarded as citizens of these tribal ministates, even though about 10 millinn live and work outside them in hlack townships on the fringes of "white" cities. It is acknowledged that these "urban blacks," pose a prohiem, and their future is being looked at by special Cabinct committee. But it has been made abundantly

"We are not going to let a hunch of insidious terrorist cowards shake the foreign policy of the United States," he declared amid the desolation of the Marines' battalion headquarters. "Foreign policy is not going to be dictated or changed by terror."

As it happeoed, one of those Lebanese militia leaders whom the Americaos suspect may have been involved in the homhings at that very moment towards the Marines, while at the same time coiling another political rope round their potential freedon of movement,

Mr Berri claimed that the Iranians had no relations with his Amal movement, but that even Iran had denied involvement in the bombings.

Perhaps predictably, Mr Berri suggested that the Christian Phalangist militia or Israel might have had "some interest in the bombings, though he did not explain what this interest might be.

American officials had intimated that three lorries, similar to those which were driven into the multinational force compounds on Sunday, had been seen last week outside the Amal offices in the Bourj el-Barajnet district of west Beirut, but Mr Berri insisted this was untrue.

In their defence, Amal offi-cials have pointed out their own Amal ambulances were sent to the Marine base on Sunday morning and were used can servicemen to hospital.

It is, however, true that Amal now has a supply line from the Chour mountains that runs down through the suhurb of Shweifat and into the slums of Haya Selum opposite the Marine lines. This road was taken over three weeks ago when Amal gunmen drove Lebanese troops out of an army positioo in an incident that hitherto has gone unreported.

12,000 Jerusalem Arabs defy PLO

From Christopher Walker, Jerosalem

Despite calls hy the Palestine Liberation Organization for a boycott, the greatest number of alestinian Arabs in east Jerusalem turned out this week to vote in municipal elections since the former Arab sector was cap-wred in the 1967 war and later annexed by Israel.

According to figures issued yesterday, 12,000 Palestinians went to the polls - 20 per cent of the 60,000 in east Jerusalem qualified to vote. This turn-out was seen as indicating a change in Arab attitudes towards the election and was 50 per cent higher than in the last poll in Political sources disclosed that the great majority of the Palestinians voted for Mr Teddy Kollek, aged 72, the Mayor of Jerusalem, who was returned hy a sweeping majority for his fifth term in an office he has made renowned by his Likud.

Half the people questioned believe that the war will develop into an international conflict, while Iran was the country most commonly cited as being responsible. More than 100 soldiers serving with the 1st Parachute Regiment stationed at Pan have already volunteered to go to Beirut to replace their dead and injured colleagues. All the soldiers in the Beirut barracks belong to the Third Company of the regiment and were volunteers.

On Sunday night, the main television news programme included a lengtby, harrowing shot of a soldier being pulled alive from under the rubble, screaming with pain. "We were absolutely scanda-lized that they could show a sequence like that," a senior officer at Pan barracks said.

Colonel Jean-Claude Cardi-nal, Commanding Officer of the regiment, said that it was a rule the regiment that when possible brothers were replaced by brothers.

But if they hear the knock and see two or three sad-faced Marines in uniform on their doorstep, they know that the news is the worst.

Grief is seeping through communities across the country. Flags everywhere are at half-mast and families and friends are chinging to each other, reading the letters the Marines have sent home.

There is an agooy of waiting. Personal records were destroyed in the Beirut explosion and it is difficult to identify many of the Marines and sailors killed.

Gradually the names are trickling out and Marines are sent to tell the families, to knock on doors, salute and offer gentle words of regret. "As soon as I saw the uniforms, I knew" one father said. In Louisiana, a couple waited up all night for news of their son, aged 19. Marines arrived at 5 am to tell them he was dead.

After the shock of the attempted coup d'état in February 1981, when he was led away from the debating chamber by paramilitary civil guards and made to pass an uncertain night with other Spanish political leaders, Gonzalez publicly declared that the 80s must be dedicated to establishing democracy soundly in Spain, and socialism would have to come later.

A new Spanish socialism needed a young and attractive figure completely dissociated from civil war hatreds and the failures of the party under the Second Republic. Gonzalez was an ideal figure for both the party apparatus and the media. But as his stature as a leader grew - he had become secretary-general of the theo PSOE, then underground, in 1974 at the age of 32 – the accusations of opportunism died down.

Since taking office his personal prestige has been such that the rightwing opposition, led by Senor Manuel Fraga, the former Franco information minister, has sensed that public opinion would not respond to an attack on him; it has coocentrated instead on ministers' allegedly unrealistic policies or inefficiency.

more to the former German Chancellor's identification with Felipe as his political heir than Herr Brandt's role as mentor. But especially in the early years, after the Spanish Socialist Party emerged from its clandestine existence in 1977, the influence of the German Social Democrats went very deep.

Indeed a German chancellorial style of governing would best describe the Gonzalez approach in his first year in office. He works with a personal team of about 65 advisers, a creation of the new administration modelled initially on the chancellor's office in Bonn. As they waited for the centre democrat coalition to collapse, socialist leaders were appalled by the inability of prime minister Calvo Sotelo to control the administration, and by the handful of ill-prepared cronies with whom his predecessor Suarez struggled to run the country. The team of advisers have succeed

In the selection of the team this has

In the crucial field of economic policy, Gonzalez put in Señor Miguel Boyer, a 44-year-old professional economist and top-level bureaucrat as "superminister" group-ing three portfolios. Senor Boyer is a convinced social democrat who once "tutored" Gonzalez, and who had introduced the future premier to Madrid's key banking and business circles. Gonzalez' performance is unimaginable without Guerra, a workman's son from Seville, and the two men have what must be an almost unique political friendship. This loyalty is one of the basic reasons for the Gonzalez administratioo's unit, which contrasts with the chaotic jockeying for position which went on almost continuously under the Centre Democrats.

The peculiar circumstances of the rebirth of Spain's Socialist Party during the last decade of the Planco regime - with a nucleus in Seville with Guerra, another in Madrid, and a third in the Basque country - help to explain Gonzalez. As. one longstanding militant from those days recalled: "There was no time for hobbies, you felt the task, which risked repression and the safety of colleagues was too important to say - 'I and sorry. I cannot do that, I am asking my fiance this evening to the cinema. We all worked very hard in those days: job and party and nothing else."

The prime minister works out of a small palace in the Monclos complex, on the northern outskirts of the capital. It was originally built by the Franco regime to receive foreign minsters but was subsequently allocated to the agriculture minstry - hence its nickname "Palace of the selected seeds". With Gonzalez, and far away from the ministries on the other side of Madrid, are the prime minister's secretariat, the team of advisers, and Senot Guerra's office. Gonzalez lives with his wife and three children in another patt in the complex, insisting on a separation of home and office. He arrives in the office at 9am, often lunches with a minister or with Guerra, tries to go home between 9 and

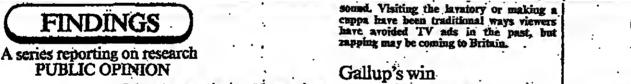

He keeps some connection with a few old friends in Seville, largely through his sister and businessman brother-in-law, but during his first months in office the work has not left him much time for anyting outside the Moncioa palace.

Carmen, his wife, an adult education teacher and doctor's daughter, is said to be important in keeping him "in touch", with life, outside the official network. Tall, attractive and sportytooking, she has proved an asset on Gonzalez' trips abroad. After the grim and ageing Franco couple they have emphasized the message broadcast by the entire Gonzalez administration – the cabiner's average age is 41 – that a brighter generation of Spanjards has moved into positions of influence in society.

Gender gap

Much is being made in the United States these days of the so-called "gender gap". Apparently while 57 per cent of adult men in the US approved of President Reagan's performance in a survey carried out last year, only 39 per cent of women did. In Australia, the Labour Party's private polls curverted that the large spine spine of ennort to suggested that the large swing of support to Bob Hawke among women, and most dramatically young women, was decisive in his victory. The gender gap has been a feature of British politics for many years, with considerably more women inclined to rote Conservative than are men. At the time of the February 1974 general election, the Conservative bids among women was 7 per cent, as it was in October 1974. Interestingly, it narrowed to 4 per cent in both May 1979 and June 1983. About half of the gender gap in Britain is accounted for by age, what sociologists would describe as "cohort bias". In plain words this means that there is a tendency to become more conservative as one grows older, and to a substantial degree women live longer than men. There is also a tendency for older people to turn out to vote on election day, thus compounding the effect.

Only twice over the last 15, years have more men said they would vote Conserva-tive than women. The first was a year ago in May, at the time of the Falklands war. The other time was last December, at the first big flare of publicity surrounding the women's peace demonstrations at Greenham Common.

In 1936 a Literary Digest shaw vote of more than two million people confidently forecast a landslide victory for the Republican presidential nominee Alf Landon, Franklin Roosevelt won an overwhelming victory on election day, as a young pollster named George Gallup predicted. Further, Gallup described in a pre-election report why the Literary Digest results were not truly reflective of a cross-section of voters. The story comes from a book published today entitled Political Opinion Polling: An International Review. A compendium of contributions by senior pollsters in ten countries, the book chronicles the first faltering steps of polling in the US and France in the 1930s, Britain and Germany in the 1940s and Ireland in the 1970s. The book brings objective evidence to the practice of politics and the art of political journalists and is published by Macmillan, at £75

Thirty-six per cent of them are "very satisfied" with their lives, compared with the average score of 24 per cent on that answer for yonths of all EEC countries. British youths, aged 15 to 24, think they are better off than their EEC counterparts in specific areas: more of them responded favoarably about their relationships with their parents (9 per cent more), friends (12 per cent), romantic relationships (7 per cent), personal prospects (12 per cent), and housing (9 per cent). Not all the best letters are by professional imaginative writers. A case could be made for awarding a special prize for dulness to the letters of Walter Pater, which are of two equally Pater, which are of two equally entirely unselective. Everything tedious kiods: either "my sisters available is there and a measure and I would be most gratified if of superfluous bulk results from you could dine with us at the fact of having translations of Bradmore Road oo Thursday, all the letters be wrote in French January 12th" or "Dear Miss printed with the same spacious-Cratchett, I am most grateful for the delightful present of your Proust is a selectioo again, one 'Nymphs in Flight' which has of the same size as Turgenev's just arrived aod which I greatly look forward to reading". politicians may be, since they help to explain other things we are interested in, their works.

These three books are more of less comparable in being the letters of three great heroes of the novel at its finest, well contained between the chrono-logical extremes of Balzac and Thomas Mann. Turgenev's are much the best, but he has the advantage here of having a, careful selection of 250 presented from a total of more than six thousand, A. V. Conrad's letters, those of his first forty years at least, make a less engrossing impact. They emphasise his fastidious sense of honour and, through the absence of those little discrepancies between one letter and another so common to collections of this kind, his right to that fastidiousness. the last man" and to "create the conditions for prolonged resistance to occupation" even though they were armed only with tifles and fewer than 300 rounds of ammunition each. These arms, he said, had been allocated to them by Bishop for self-defence.

In a message last Saturday, Castro had told the Cubans in Grenada to adopt and fortify defensive pos-itions, and that their duty was "to die fighting, no matter how difficult and dangerous the conditions may be.'

He described how, following Bishop's death, Cuba's relations with the new government had been "cool" but he had hoped that "by a miracle of wisdom and serenity" they might have improved.

On Saturday he had also sent a message to Washington denying any iotention to interfere in Grenada's internal affairs, expressing concern for the welfare of the US citizens on the island and suggesting that "it is coovenient to keep in touch on this matter so as to avoid violence."

He received no reply, he said, until 8.30am (Cuban time) on Tuesday - one and a half hours after the Americans had landed on Grenada and had already, according to him, begun an assault on Cuban positions

The US message announced the intention "to respond to the request for intervention", offered safe passage for the Cubans "when conditions permit" and requested the avoidance of steps that might exacerbate the situation. It was signed "with the highest and most distinguished consideration."

Castro poured scorn on US claims that the invading military contained forces from the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States and of Jamaica and Barbados - "they have no forces to invade Grenada," he seid.

At 5pm yesterday, after 10 hours of fighting, he had received a message from the US regretting the armed clashes, which had been due to "misunderstandings". At 8.30pm he replied: "We did our best to prevent the intervention, which is totally unjustifiable."

The Cubans, he said, were still holding on with bravery and staunchness in "a battle for the small nations of the world." He added: "Any attempt to continue the fighting tomorrow and gain a military victory will lead to a disastrous moral defeat."

Castro concluded: "Eternal glory to the Cubans who have died and to those still fighting. Patria o muerte. Venceramos." Around the bar there was at first a smattering of applause, then louder and prolonged. As it died, there was satisfied laughter: the Cubans clearly felt that Castro had put up the expected parformance, projecting beliefs they share.

'Shocking ignorance of past experience'

Will Kinnock keep to the left? deputy to Mr Hattersley in the Labour leadership, the pressures on him to force Labour forward on the road to the left would have been hard to resist. But will they be so inresistible now that he is leader? The history of Labour leaders is of men who (with one significant exception) rose to influence as spokesmen of the left, and then, faced in power with the unpleasant reality of what the policies of the left would entail, retreated from them. (again with a single exception).

The Labour leader who had never been a candidate of the left was Hugh Gaitskell, and his attempt to free his party from socialism (by which I mean steadily increasing state ownership of everything that matters) and to eradicate its tendency to disengage from the Western defence system brought him under constant attack. Mr Callaghan's short-lived leadership could, perhaps, be cited as another example, but it was bequeathed him in the exceptional circumstances of Sir Harold Wilson's abrupt resignation from office. (Every other Labour leader has been elected when the party was in opposition.) Other Labour leaders have been chosen either as candidates of the left or when the left was in the ascendant. That was true of Macdonald and Lansbury. It was even true of Attlee, who emerged as leader of the post-1931 Labour rump when moderation was out of fashion. These were the Popular. Front years when the question was freely discussed what special powers a Labour government should take to ensure that it could bring in a socialist state. Though Attlee did not agree with his colleague Stafford Cripps about the possibility of working with communism, there is no reason to think that he dissented much from the ethos of the Left Book Chub years.

What is more, Attlee's post-war government was more socialist than any other Labour government, since it achieved extensive nationalization. and the state management of collective welfare provisions. It didmore to establish the authority of the state than any other government in our history, and in that sense Attlee was a Labour leader who did not retreat much from earlier positions.

But that was not necessary. For one thing, the 1945 government was building on a wholly noo-socialist society and would still leave a very large private sector behind it. The grievances of the time, the size of the majority and the fact that the industries taken over were large and basic also made the task easier.

If Mr Neil Kinnock had become in office fighting off the left on international and national policy. He tried to make Britain a social democratic country fit for people like Roy Jenkins to live in, though in the end the left was too much for him. Even Mr Foot, after years of ranting, tried to leave room in the party for the moderates. So what about the left's latest leader, Mr Neil Kinnock? He 'too shows signs of nervousness about the galloping horses from the left which have dragged him to office so early in life.

The moderates therefore hope that they have a leader in the old traditioo who will use his bona fides with the left to make the party dilute its leftist commitments.

In 1945, Attlee replied to Churchill's emphasis on the rights of the individual and the danger of being ordered about by officials with a graphic picture of the time when employers were free to work little children for 16 bours a day", when women were exploited through sweated labour, and "when people were free to neglect sanitation so that thousands died of preventable diseases." For years, he said, remedies were blocked on the plea of freedom for the individual, and it was "only through the power of the state, given to it by Parliament, that the public has been protected against the greed of ruthless profit-makers and property owners".

What Attlee did not say was that these remedies had been applied in pre-socialist days and by non-socialist means. In was not, even in 1945, inevitable that what remained to be done must be done by socialism. There is an essential difference between the duty of the state to lay down rules to secure the basic welfare of all (and to protect the liberty of the poor from that of the rich) and a socialist society m which the state does the job itself (as it needs to do only in such limited areas as defence and the police).

To talk of individual liberty and equality as though each precludes the other, simply because they would do so if pursued to logical absurdity, is foolish. Both concepts are necessary for a free society, and their relationship can be seen in the state's need to regulate free markets, without which markets would not for long remain free.

The case against socialism is not that it seeks the welfare of all but that it does so by giving great power to the state and its officials, who are as corruptible by the richness of power as a millionaire is by material wealth. The petty official, with his little brief anthority, may find it as hard to pass through the eye of a needle as a magnate. That is the problem of socialism.

Its consequences are seen not only in Marxist countries where the state -determines all things, but in those areas of our own society where its rule is insufficiently challenged.

Under socialism, most decisions are taken by small activist groups on the majority's behalf, not by the majority itself collectively or indi-vidually. That is why it is unpopular. The curious thing is that Labour pro-leadership years, Sir Harold's Leaders themselves in practice have rhetoric for party consumption was distrusted socialism, feared the state solidly in the Benn-Foot-Kinnock and retreated from the very rhetoric

War games fun

Boys will be boys, and the 50 reporters conscripted for an army exercise to Hampshire were completely lacking in gravitas. The man "From the Daily Express wrote "Pravda" oo his identity tag while the man from the Mirror wrote "Sinn Fein" oo his. The man from the News of the World didn't make his excuses and leave - he didn't even turn up. Reveille at 5 am put the entire company into a state of shock, but luckily for them the plane that was to take them somewhere nasty to be put through their paces became fogboood. Instead they spent the day in an officers' mess propping up the bar - for some a oot uofamiliar exercise.

Breathtaking

One does not usually think of the officers of the Metropolitan Police as poetie characters. Yet the brave act nf nne Pc Peter Evans, who saved the life of a wilting goldfish by applying mouth-to-mouth resusci-tation, has iospired P District Commander Terry Siggs to celebrate the event in verse:

Suddenly a scatte wriggle Made the lady owner giggle. Sam the fish was back to life, Cutting water like a knife.

Rope trick

The Execution Suite is the chilling title of a novel, completed and in search of a publisher, by Labour MP Robert Kilroy-Silk. The story is metaphorical: the man in the condemned cell is meant to be the Labour Party. Does he die? "There are such things as reprieves; you must wait and see", said the author. Today, Enigma publishes another Kilroy-Silk oovel. It's described as a political thriller, and souods casier going.

Mad flurry

The smash-hit musical versioo of the film, La Cage aux Folles, now playing to enthralled New Yorkers, will be transferring to London in a flurry of feathers and rhinestones, The cast is still being chosen, but the frontrunners to play Georges, the world-weary club owner, and Albin, his frantic, drag-artist lover, are Rock Hudson and Danny Kaye. Hudson would play Georges who, with his chestful of flashy chains and brick-coloured make-up, is a long way away from his previous all-American hero roles, such as the dedicated surgeon who saved Jane Wyman's life in the film, Magnificent Obsession.

Two bundred years ago novels were hardly respectable. Nor were their publishers. To invent depravity - for what are oovels but accounts of one kind of depravity or another? - was surely a calculated insult to the munificence of the Prime Creator a hlasphemy. Novels were seen to weaken the mind and the aesthetie sensibility, and to san the morals of young womeo, always very tender.

But it is oot philosophers we look tn now to explain the nature of our reality, nor to the courch to tell us how to behave. We look to our nnvelists to explain it all away. Writers, once subversive, are oow seeo to carry the weight of the establishmeot upon their shoulders.

The Booker Prize goes to a work of literature. It does not go to the "best" novel written in any one year: nor can the other five shortlisted be said to be the five next-best. How cnuld this be, unless by happy accideot? Writers may be geniuses, but judges are not. And so the prize is given, and bere we are. There are 120 people at this dinner. Of these, perhaps 20 or 30 are writers - six shartlisted authors. three writer judges, and a handful of others who double as critics, publishers, agents and so forth.

Writers know well enough that they are like Atlas, bearing on their sboulders all those who depend upon them for their income, the exercise of their own skills, their status and their very jobs. Pubbooksellers, editors, lisbers. librarians, journalists, academics, festival organizers, arts councils, would be nothing without writers. So, to the publishers I would say this. We are the raw material of your trade. You do tend to forget it, you know. You use us, the living us, and quite frankly you don't look after your raw material very well. And as you turn into an industry, so we must turn into workers and organize. I think you'd do without us altogether if you could, if there was a way of producing a book without writers - people who can never be trusted to produce a product of consistent quality.

Writers of the land, unite answer back. I am now going to ask some awkward questions. I am going to ask you why you will not negotiate with the writers who wish to negotiate with you? I will ask you if in your dealing with authors you really are being fair, hooourable, and right, or merely getting away with what you can? Whether the "custom and practice" you quote as a reason for this and that, in an industry changed beyond all recognition since these customs and practices arose, can really go on as they are. If you are not careful, you will kill the goose that lays your golden eggs.

I will tell you what the writers dislike. The writer dislikes your paternalism. It is rivalled only, perhaps, by BBC Radio, which has a world monopoly in radio plays; but even they are learning. The writer dislikes the way you say: "Aren't you lucky, we're going to publish your book - actually publish your book! What a risk we're taking: how very, very lucky you are, and honoured! Just sign this, please, you don't need an agent. Custom and practice!" It is wearing very thin.

The writer dislikes the rise of the editor. The editor is, of course, very often the writer's best friend. That is

So the writer writes half-finished novels and says: What do you think, what shall I do? And the editors say, because that's what they are employed to do: Why, develop this character, or draw that one back, or change the end, or set it in Cardiff. not Belfast - oo-one's buying Belfast any more, and anyway the Welsh market's still untapped.

The writer dislikes the way you underpay your editors, and your designers, and your production people.

We know there are graduates queueing up at your door for jobs in publishing, and we know they have first class degrees in English Literature. So why should you bother to pay them more? They may be queueing, but they're not queueing for the right reason. They just want jobs. They doo't love books.

The ones you want toss up: heads a life of dignified poverty in publishing; tails, an exciting and well-paid job in television or journalism. The coin comes down tails of course it does. They make sure it does. And that 's where your new young editors are. Somewhere else. like the writers.

We wonder why the publishers apart from one or two magnificent pcople - did not help us, the writers, to get Public Lending Right, They helped, en masse, in other countries. It was so evidently fair that we should have it.

We find it extraordinary that you demand to lease the copyright of what comes out of our heads, not just while we're living but after we're dead - 50 years after we are dead. Why? There is no sense in it, or justice, only custom and practice. We lease our work in other fields for a period of years - only two years in television - and the proportion of capital to reward invested is higher there than it is in publishing.

Well, reading takes longer than viewing. As things are, a novel which I write when I am 20 can still make money for you when I am 90, when I am getting not a penny. We will give 10 years - 10 years of your business, 10 years of our lives.

I do not want to end this on a sour note. But the Booker Prize is a serious event and a serious occasion, and we must take literature seri-ously, and put its bouse in order. I know enough of the temperament and character of most - not all - of the authors here tonight to believe that what I say will find sympathy with them. Writers and publishers inhabit the same world, share the same beliefs, and have the same ambitions - part worldly, part literary. It is important that some real reconciliatioo between us is accomplished, and soon. Your writers, I can tell you, are in a fair old state of indignation.

The Writers' Guild, which will soon be linking with the Society of Authors and the Theatre Writers' Guild - for these days a writer increasingly is a writer, is writer, is a writer and can move easily among the various media - is anxious to achieve this reconciliation. We hope your Publishers Associatioo will do the same, and may even link, for mutual advantage, with the Book-sellers Association. In the meantime we, the writers, will gladly go on writing novels for you, and even judging them,

I bought my own version of this instrument after an encounter in a pub with a bishop. It was the only place I could find to interview him. He had some interesting things to say, but more to the point, an interesting way of saying them. When I returned to the office and addressed the typewriter. I could easily remember the gist, but found his exact words had been lost from memory. As I wrote a second-best piece, lacking the distinctive colour of his American turn of phrase, it occurred to me bow much easier life would be with a miniature tape-recorder. Having such a thing now, bowever, has solved one problem only to raise another: is it ethical?

How, for instance, would that American bishop feel if he subse-quently discovered I had bugged our entire conversation? Or, had I taken it out and placed it on the bar alongside our half pints, would he have dried up almost completely, coossing his words with the care of a man being interviewed live on the radio?

One recalls the occasion during the election campaign when a local newspaper reporter had talked to Michael Foot's wife and reported her as saying that Foot would retire sooo after the election. There was a fuss about whether she had really said it. A micro-casette recorder surrepticiously switched on in time would have put the matter beyond dispute. But would it have been fair?

There are those who hold that all is fair in love, war, and journalism; they would no doubt argue that a tape-recorder is nothing more than a superior version of the reporter's own memory, giving him the total and exact recall that some blessed individuals already appear to possess. I don't believe most interviewees would see it quite like that. In their shoes, I would feel tricked.

It is not easy to say why, however, without exploring the relationship

Everything you say will be taken in For a modest outlay, today's between the journalist and the Complete Journalist can have in his people he deals with. Many aspects of this relationship are left unde> say who told you, but Asides and confidences and small indiscretions, all grist to the journalist's mill if he knows how to handle them, are not quite the same if they are all on tape. It seems as if the professional relationship has been somehow disturbed by this electronic cavesdropper, even if no one but the journalist will ever bear the tape played through. "Between you, me, and the gate-post" is never quite the same as "between you, me, the gate-post, and the miniature tape-recorder in your briefcase."

There appears to be a moral relationship parallel to the professional one whenever a journalist talks to a source, and one which is far more subtle than the need to protect the source's identity. Whatever the nature of this moral relationship, it seems that a taperecorder necessarily stands ontside it, unless deliberately brought in. But to say "I think you ought to know that everything you say is being recorded" is the perfect formula for inducing total reticence.

There are situations where undisclosed recording would seem justi fied. Press conferences present no problems, for even those giving them often tape the whole proceedings. It would not be unfair to record the remarks of an eye-witness of a bank robbery, when only the most casual and temporary professional relationship exists between the journalist and the source; both are, in a sense, anonymous and depersonalized participants, with no moral obligations to each other.

Crooks and commen are perhaps fair game. The tape may be an important part of the evidence against them. Outside these clear categories, however, the lines are much harder to draw,

I have a tape-recording of the Archbishop of Canterbury chatting to me, made when the temptation to switch on my new gadget on every occasion was almost irresistible. He did not know he was being recorded. but I am sure he will forgive me. He said nothing in particular, in fact most of the sound is of two pairs of footsteps. But was it wrong of mit? I am almost inclined to think it was.

WHEN FRIENDS FALL OUT

The Government emerges bat-tered but not seriously discredited credited from yesterday's Commons debate on Grenada. from There is nn reason, nn the evidence so far, to doubt the Foreign Secretary's account of the events leading np to the invasion. According to this the British Government were not told of Mr Reagan's decision until Monday evening - that is, until after Sir Geoffrey's state-ment to the House. Before that an appeal for help from the Caribbean states appears to have gono astray, as did a message from Grenada. Sir Geoffrey is therefore absolved of any suspicion that he lied to the House. On the other hand, as Mr Julian Amery suggested, he was more bland and uninformative than he should have been in view of the amount of information that was available to him at that time on . the discussions leading up to the invasion. He was aware that the appeal was on its way, even if it had not arrived. He would have done better to be somewhat more frank with the House.

Kinnock Dine jegy

Was he misled by Washington? According to his own account, the Caribbean appeal eventually reached London on Monday evening. There were then two conversations with President Reagan. In the first, the President said he was giving serious consideration to the appeal. In the second he said he had decided to respond posi-tively. After midnight Mrs Thateher again reiterated her misgivings. The question, therefore, is whether President Reagan was being frank in the first conversation. In the House yesterday, Sir Geoffrey would not be drawn into saying more than that the consultations were regrettably less than he would have wished.

Thus the picture presented by. the Government is of an honest disagreement between two allies, each supported by different refused to participate but the United States then proceeded, with actions which it deemed necessary for its own security and that of its citizens in the area. There is no disgrace to the British Government in this, and it was absurd of Mr Healey to exploit this issue to accuse Mrs Thatcher of being Mr Reagan's poodle. She put up all the resistance that was feasiblo in the circumstances, at any rate short of making a public issue of it over the weekend.

It is also wrong to insist that Britain should vote against the United States at the United Nations. Britain's disagreement has been made clear in word and deed. Her aim must now be to reduce the damage to the alliance. Much depends, of course, on the wording of the resolution. There would certainly be no point in supporting a resolution calling for the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from Grenada. Now that the Americans are there the best hope must be that they succeed in getting a constitutional government elected as soon as possible. Withdrawal would make this more difficult.

Nevertheless, damage has been done to the alliance. This is not to say that the United States was obliged to follow British advice. Any government is first of all responsible for the security of its own people. In principle the United States is perfectly entitled to act on its own if it believes its own security to be threatened, just as a British Government would also ignore American advice if they felt their responsibility to their own people demanded this. The fact that in this case Washington's perception of its interests was, probably wrong does not affect the principle.

However, national security can seldom be treated in total states in the Caribbean. Britain isolation. Disagreements over be redoul made its objections plain and military action in the nuclear age Atlantie, can be extremely dangerous. It is therefore not irrelevant to bring in discussion of nuclear weapons in Europe. There are two dangers that could arise from disagreement over their use. One is that the Americans would not fire them even if urged to do so by Europeans for fear of inviting retaliation against the United States. This is nne of the reasons for Britain to maintain its own nuclear deterrent. The other danger is that the United States might fire them against the wishes of the host country. As Sir Geoffrey Howe pointed nut, this danger is catered for in political agreements that are supposed to preclude such a possibility. So far there is no reason to imagine that political relations could deteriorate to such an extent that these agreements would be ignored, so a dual key system is not strictly necessary on the "Grenada" principle.

Mutual security depends not nn specific agreements or dual keys but on achieving a sufficient degree of general agreement on the major issues of the day. Unfortunately - and dangerously - there is now less agreement in the Atlantic alliance than there ought to be. This is not strictly an Atlantic problem. Though Mi Reagan's view of the world is not fully shared in most of Europe, it is also widely contested in the United States, where he gets a low rating in the opinion polls for his handling of foreign affairs. Lack of consensus in the alliance is therefore aggravated by lack of consensus in Washington. The disagreement over Grenada has shown this up. It is probably survivable because Grenada is small and with luck and skill the crisis will not last lnng - though even this is not certain. But the disagreement must be seen as a warning that. efforts to bridge the broader differences in the alliance must be redoubled on both sides of the

Outlawing the terror weapon From Canon George Austin

Sir, The horrifying massacre of so many young men of the peacekeep-ing forces in Beirn, more appalling only in the numbers involved than today's report (October 24) of a little girl's death in a grenade attack by Basque separatists, is yet one more act of terror in a fearful catalogue of violence to which new atrocities are added daily, by government forces of left and right as well as by factional groups who will be called revolutionary patriots, freedom fighters, or terrorists according to one's own support for or aversion to the cause they seek to promote. violence to which new atrocities are

Is there no end to the escalation of the use of the weapon of terror against often unarmed men, women and children in the furtherance of a political cause? It is exactly 40 years ago that Bishop George Bell, writing in his diocesan newsletter, attacked the terror-bombing of cities and civilians as "a wrong deed, whether done by the Nazis or ourselves".

Two years previously, he had called for the British and German governments to make solemn declarations that both would refrain from the night bombing of cities, as a limitation which would "make a halt in the world's rashing down to ever-deeper baseness and con-fusion" (in a letter to The Times on April 17, 1941).

In the face of the growing use of the weapon of terror in our own day Church leaders have been quick to condemn the actions of those whose cause they deplore while seeming to condone by their silence (or their excuses) the same acts of terror committed in support of a cause for which they have sympathy, a unilateralism which defeats moral principle by making the end more important than the means.

Experience of ecclesiastical vacillation in this makes it only a vain hope that Pope, archbishops, leaders of the great confessional families of the world, could combine to proclaim the moral principle which might bring the world back from the baseness and confusion" to which it has undoubtedly sunk.

With the United Nations an even more unreliable source for moral leadership, is it oot time for presidents and prime ministers of the greater nations of the world not only to outlaw the weapon of terror against unarmed civilians but also those many groups who use it to further their ends (regardless of the justice of their cause) as well as the nations who give them support and sanctuary, before the cancer spreads further and mankind destroys its own humanity? A role for Britain in Caribbean? From Mr Fabian Bullen

Sir, "For the first time we are really free". This broadcast comment by a local Grenadian surely sums up the real feelings of Grenadians in general and why her sister islands decided to request the United States to help them rid Grenada of its isolated but heavily armed de facto solars britain was asked to assist, but she refused and then cries "shame on the United States" for what should have been Britain's

Yet the rest of the world was prepared to stand by and see the same rights violated by a group of people who had extreme views on democratic freedom and, judging by recent events, were openly prepared to use violence, bloodshed and imprisonment to silence their opponents.

It would appear that politicians and maybe the media are not interested in the real feelings of people, but prefer to drown them-selves in the twisted world of politics.

The Tory Government very swiftly sent troops and ships 8,000 miles to regain a barren, non-strategic land and are now spending millions of pounds setting up Fortress Falklands, but they refused to be involved with their own Commonwealth citizens "Garrison Grenada". in Must we now believe that there were more votes to be gained by action in the former but not in the latter - or do the Government no longer have the courage of their convictions? The United States, for all its faults, and for its own reasons, has clearly demonstrated to Britain that it must accept its responsibility to help its Commonwealth cousins. Therefore the time has now come for Parliament to stop senseless argument and allow the Government to take positive actioo in helping Grenada to restore peace, law and order.

They must also provide actual involvement by helping Grenada to continue its programmes of develop-ment and rebuild its stagnant

Home Defence Force From Sir David Wills

Sir, Your leading article, "Mr Heseltine's opportunity" (October 12), dealt in general terms with an analysis of the revised structure, manpower and equipment requirements which it suggested should be brought into being over the next few years in Britain's three Services if they are to achieve their greatest effectiveness, and in your final paragraph you state that the challenge which Mr Heseltine faces today is that "the preponderance of British forces permanently maintained on the European cootinent any charge, however high. Under the nld rules any charge whatever had to be met if it was unreasonable to expect the person concerned to move. The new arrangements remove this openended obligation. Instead, there will be three apper limits in each locality for nursing homes, residential care homes and for others. In many cases, of course, pay-ments will be well below the limit, since claimants get only the amount they actually have to pay. There has not been a nursing home limit before and charges in these homes are higher than in other kinds of accommodation. But as the old open-ended power was largely used. for nursing homes they should under the new system be oo higher than charges previously met and - and this is the important point - a maximum is being set to the amount paid in any locality. When the Social Security Advisory Committee reported on the new regulations in July their main concern was not that too much would be paid but too little. They said that a system where the claimant had to rely entirely on the reasonableness of the limits could not function unless the limits were realistic. In preparing for the new system, therefore, supplementary benefit officers have been asked to take particular care to set realistic limits. Otherwise claimants, often elderly and infirm, could simply be unable to get accommodatioo.

The fact is that for many years private residential homes and nursing homes bave been an important part of the range of services available for elderly people and have increased the range of choice open to those in oced of care. The Government see no reason to restrict that choice. Local authorities and health anthorities themselves can and do make use of these bomes by paying for residents and patients in them. This is a sensible and desirable way of making the fullest use of the resources available for care, Residential homes are subject to statutory registration and inspectioo by local anthorities and nursing omes by district health authorities. The Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudicatioo Act 1983 strengthened these safeguards.

To assist registratioo authorities the Government has invited expert working parties from the Centre for Policy on Ageing and the Natiooal Association of Health Authorities to draw up guidelines oo standards of accommodatioo and management. Yours faithfully, thirteenth century equivalent of a permanent secretary, a clérical bureaucrat at the court of King Henry III, greeted the first MPs can be imagined - all those impertinent parliamentary questions about a prospective devaluation of the groat. In lanadopted by the priestly drafts-man of the Privy Counsellor's The Callaghan administration oath, he has heaped scorn on reached a comparable position in or fleshed out the details. Their prime intent was to head off Mr Clement Freud's private member's bill, which also died when Mr Callaghan lost his vote of confidence. On becoming Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher would have none of it. A second term and a 144-seat majority have not thawed her resolve. Yet the Prime Minister and the Cabinet Secretary would be advised to ponder carefully the FDA's prescription. It shows them a patch of high ground that could be defended against the zealots of freedom of information. The foxhole they currently occupy is defensive in intent but offers no genuine protection. It offers the worst of all worlds. Whitehall's battery of confidentiality codes, conventinns and statutes accumulated since 1250 amount to a leakers' charter. Through their ludricrous nver-extension, which brings them into disrepute, they do not assist the maintenance of confidentiality even in those areas where it is justified. They put the Government continually on the defensive, making it furtive where it should be forthcoming. It is fearful of the people who elected it with a thumping majority. If Mrs Thatcher fails to consider moving from her dangerous foxhole on to the safer high ground, everyone will be the loser - the public, Parliameot, civil servants and the Cabinet. Government is public business nnt a private firm. It should comport itself accordingly.

Local government

From Professor Bryan Keith-Lucas

Sir, In the course of the present disagreement between central and local government the Secretary of State for the Environment recently gave a talk on local governmen history to a group of councillors and chief officers.

In his speech he referred to the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834 and the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835, saying that "the fundamen-tal element of these legislative reforms was that Parliament created statutory anthorities with prescribed powers but with no power to act outside those powers."

This is a new interpretation of history. The Municipal Corpor-ations Act did not create a single new statutory authority: it reorga-nized the existing corporations, all created by royal charter, some of government in the towns, counties them dating from before the creation of Parliament. As such it has been held by a series of decisions in the courts that they were not limited by the doctrines of ultra vires, but were BRYAN KEITH-LUCAS, 7 Church Street, free to do whatever was not expressly prohibited by Parliament. The doctrine of uitra vires was Wyc. Evolved by the courts, not by Ashford, Kent.

From the President of the British He also announced that "there can be no room in our unitary state for unilateral declarations of inde-pendence by individual local auth-orities". No local authority has made such a declaration; they have only claimed the right, within the law, to do what they think right for their people, as distinct from what the central ministries think right. Mr lenkin also referred to the Sociological Association the central ministries think right. Mr Jenkin also referred to the Revolution Settlement of 1688. He might ponder the lesson of the events that led to that settlement. What finally forced James II to abdicate and go on his travels was his ill-advised attempt, abetted by Judge Jeffreys, to force the borough corrowations to surrender their He provides no evidence to support such a sweeping allegation, one which is a gratuitous insult to all members of this association, whether or not they hold one of a oumber of intellectual positions which could be identified as Marxist",

It is difficult to know how he could have such evidence. Indeed, as our register of members indicates, their interests and publications range over a wide variety of theoretical perspectives.

In the absence of evidence his letter, and its publication, can at best be regarded as highly unfortunate. Yours faithfully, R. K. BROWN, President,

Pension arrangements

From Mr Martin Paterson

Sir, In the current lobbying for individualized pensioo arrange-ments, for whatever reason, there seems to be a persistent lack of understanding of the fact that a final salary scheme is a form of insurance relying on a pooled fund to meet its commitments and backed by the employer. Therefore yon cannot reasonably expect an employer, or for that matter the fund's trustees, to agree to administer a final salary scheme and at the same time divide amongst the members the assets needed to underwrite it.

It is necessary to choose between one system or the other and, if the choice is left to the employees, it would have to be exercised, in fairness, at the date of entry to the

But before people choose to have their own individual funds they should weigh carefully the risks to which they are exposed in relation to future inflation against which the final salary scheme insures them. To do so one really needs to look not just up to, but beyond, retirement age. Consider, for example, the plight of someone who retires at a time of low inflation and low interest rates. His available cash will then purchase him a relatively low pension. If inflation then rises again, he has no protection. If a final salary scheme is well funded and well invested it can provide some help to its pensioners in this predicament, but the "individualized" pensioner has no one to look to.

Another point frequently forgot-ten is that employees, unlike the self-employed, cannot normally choose the date at which they retire and are therefore the more vulnerable to variations in the rate of inflation and investment return in the years immediately before and after their pension is bought.

Yours faithfully, MARTIN PATERSON, Chairman, Martin Paterson Associates Limited, 10 Buckingham Place, SW1. October 19.

Mr Heseltine, however, faces yet another challenge, which is how best to deal with a specific insidious and much less publicised Soviet threat to all the Nato allies and especially to Britain - namely, that of the Soviet diversionary brigades which are specifically trained for exactly the kind of devastating sabotage which Argentina endeavoured to put into effect against Gibraltar at the time of the Falklands war.

Fortunately this is a challenge which is far more easily (and cheaply) met than the challenge to which yon refer in your leading article and which has to be dealt with in the context of our relationships with our Nato allies. For a total capital allocation of only £150m spread over some years (provided separately from the Defence Vote) there could be created

God's person

From the Reverend Robert Llewelyn Sir, Lest it be thought that the urge to recognise the motherhood of God is peculiarly modern, will you allow the words of Julian of Norwich (though she was not first): "As truly as God is our father so just as truly is he our mother". There is much more to the same effect in her Revelations of Divine Love, completed in about 1393.

To call God he or she affirms that personality in the Godhead is not less than that which we experience in ourselves, even though we know it to be vastly beyond anything our human minds can comprehend. It is the only protection language offers against "it", which would make God less than personal.

To call God he and she additionally affirms that we humans (made in God's image) are to learn to integrate within ourselves the masculine and feminine elements (the animus and anima) which belong to us all. Yours faithfully, ROBERT LLEWELYN. (Chaplain at the Julian Shrine), c/o All Hallows, Rouen Road, Norwich.

We all hope that this will never happen, hut as the Prime Minister said when speaking in Ottawa last month, "the Russians must never be tempted to believe they could win a war against the West". Britain therefore should at least be prepared for the worst and can be prepared for the worst at a trivial cost (in the context of a Defence Budget of £16bn or more) added to a firm determination fostered by the Government. It is high time that the Government gave a lead in the creation of such a Home Defence Force, which would be part of the

Law Report October 27 1983 Court of Appeal

Premiums from development of land liable to income tax

Section 488 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 was capable of applying to a commercial transaction which was not an artificial transaction nor designed to avoid tax, notwithstanding that the section fell in Part XVII of the Act, headed "Tax avoidance", and the side-note to the section read

"Artificial transactions in land". The Court of Appeal so held, dismissing an appeal by the taxpayer, John Luke Lowther, one of the trustees of Lady Teresa Agnew's Holland House Estates, against a decision of Mr Justice Warner (The Times November 24, 1982), whereby he allowed the Crown's appeal from a decision of the general commissioners for Kensingtoo who discharged certain ients to income tax on the capital gains made on the disposal of 2.6 acres of residential development land. The taxpayer was one of the trustees of a disentailing deed made in 1960 to rearrange the trusts of the will of the fifth Earl of lichester. The settled land included four large houses in Addison Road, Kensing-ton, the leases of which expired in 1970.

Therefore, it was submitted, there was no question of section 423 applying and the trustees were simply liable to capital gains tax in the ordinary way.

The rates of capital gains tax were lower than the relevant rates of income tax. It was said that there was no reason why the trustees should be liable in a different basis of taxation because they had worked out a formula which gave financial benefit from a future development. There was no allegation that the trustees had the intention of avoiding tax and they were in fact the land when developed, and any gain of a capital nature is obtained liable to capital gains tax. Though he cannot recall having given an interview in twenty years. Charles Dyer remains one of the best one-man shows in town: an actor-dramatist of 55, he turns up in the reference books as the author of two of the most successful plays in the postwar history of the British theatre (Rattle of a Simple Man. in 1962 and Staircase in 1966), but the rest of his life, and indeed far too much of his other work, remains clouded in a kind. of mystery of which he is proudly part-creator. Like a conjuror who believes that if you show the children how the rabbit comes out of the hat they will never watch the trick again, Dyer prefers to remain deeply anonymous, which seems a not inconsiderable feat when you then come face-to-face with one of the most manic and cotertaining solo digressors in the husiness

Now bowever there chance to see where be has been these last few years: his new comedy Lovers Dancing (one which reunites birn with the director Donald McWhinnie for the first time since Rattle) opens at the Albery tonight with a cast headed by Paul Eddington, Georgina Hale, Colin Blakely and Jane Carr. But what is it about?

"Love. Hate. Greed. Desire, Loss. I only write about life, about people divorced from God. because God has speot twenty million years laughing at us. My characters may not understand each other, but together they tell a story about people's ioadequacies and about the sharing of those ioad-equacies. It's about people shricking for glory, solving little mysteries, composing a snatch of music and hearing it oo a distant crackle from Samarkand. It's about the juxtaposition of two couples, nbout loneliness and frustration, about lovers who, though faithful, can'l come to terms with each other. It's about good in an evil world. What else is there? And you wonder why I

Dyer's people are capable of behaving unexpectedly well -that is one reasoo why his work is so much more exhilarating than that of most of his contemporaries" Nobody who saw Scofield and Magee in Staircase at the Aldwych (or even Burtoo and Harrison in the disappointing movie version) could bave failed to realize they were in the presence of some great writing; what may have beeo less obvious is that they were watching the middle part of a trilogy of loneliness made up on either side by Rattle and a play called Mother Adom which got critically destroyed at Hamp-stead in 1973 despite the fact that Hobsoo (again) called it "one of the few real tragedies of our time" The plays belong together. Rattle is about man and Rattle woman, Staircase about man and man, Mother Adam about and man, Mother Adam about thing is not to get depressed. man and mother. What else is a playwright supposed to do to make a living for a wife and three sons? "Sometimes 1 used to be rehearsing some Ray Cooney farce in Southsea and playing another of my own in Portsmouth on the same day; other times I lived off Wonted One Body: a thriller of mine which mercifully is still the ooe that really pays the rent in bad years.

I started off trying to be Agatha Christie, and only became myself years later. I reckon a play takes three years to write, and theo four years after that to get produced. Most of the people who read Rattle and said they wanted to do it had died before the first night. "For a long time, the acting paid for the writing: 1 used to get five pounds a week from the theatre in Crewe for acting, and about five pence a week for the writing. Now it's the other way round because I still act a bit, though I never found it easy. Casting directors used to tell me I had the wrong sort of moustache. Eight plays of mice were staged at the King's. Southsea, but none of them got much further and that was when I taught myself to expect oothing, to plod on regardless.

"I come of no tradition, have no friends in the theatre, have never seen a play unless I had to act it. All my plays start as novels, simply because that's the way I bave to write them to get the full picture. Not that anybody ever really understands what the plays are about, at least not critics: Staircase is no more about bomosexuality than Rattle was about impotence. Both are plays about loncliness. I only realized that the two men in Staurcase were homosexual long after I had started writing the play. "My plays teod to lie around

But it is too early to tell whether this signals an im-provement in Britain's underly-ing trade balance which has deteriorated sharply this year. The monthly figures are highly erratic and those for the third quarter as a whole suggest a further worsening in trade performance, with exports slightly lower and imports rather higher than in the spring. The traditional surplus on trade in invisibles - services such as banking, insurance and shipping - valued at an estimated £160m a month in the third quarter, pushed up the balance of payments current beginning of the year.

The pickup in the domestic economy this year has sucked in more imports though markets for British exports remain depressed. The volume of imports in the third quarter was more than 10 per cent up on a year earlier, while exports grew by just over 1 per cent, after a short-lived surge last winter.

Trade officials said yesterday that import penetration appeared to bave increased in recent months while the underlying level of exports, excluding had declined since the

The figures, published yester-day in the official Employment Gazette, were nevertheless a disappointment to the Government because they follow preliminary estimates suggesting that employment in the second quarter had risen for the first time since the economic downturn began in 1979.

Another aspect of the trade, which particularly concerns trading standards officers at Honnslow, who cover London's Heathrow airport, is the fast-growing business of importing components from the Far East and India to be repackaged in England ready for re-export as the real thing, with British documentation. One officer said: "Counter-feiting is definitely one of our biggest problems. We have got a strongroom full of components, jeans, and tapes." However, like trading standards officers in so many other areas of the country, the 24member Hounslow staff can barely cope with the problem which is just one of many areas where they act as public watchdogs. In future the Hounslow Trading Standards Department will concentrate on

"blitzing" ooe or two problem areas at a time, rather than. maintaining a regular watch on one area of investigation, to try to use its staff more effectively.

Despite recent newsworthy successes, investigators have ooted a change in the pattern of SUCCES trade. Traditionally, the counterfeit goods originated in the Far East, first from Japan, then Taiwan and Korea. But Mr Vincent Carratu, whose agency is one of the leading private investigation firms working in this field, said: "These counterfeits were usually rubbish". He is much more concerned by the increasing number of sophisticated counterfeits which are coming from Europe.

Mr Carratu blames the recession and free trade within the EEC for encouraging the development of a more sophisticated counterfeiting industry which concentrates on high value goods like perfume and fashion accessories

The problem is aggravated by the high mark-up on fashion products which carry a famous brand name. Often counterfeiters can make a product which is of identical quality to the real thing, but sell it much cheaper. In these cases, they are merely cashing in on the huge sums invested by manufacturers in promoting and marand services failed. keting their goods and the consumer actually finishes up with a good deal. "Companies which were for that reason, worrying. In essence it is based on the struggling against the recession suddenly realized that they could make a lot of money very quickly by copying other prod-ucts," says Mr Carratu, "In the past, counterfeits were often so bad that people could always identify them. Now the Europeans are far more shrewd.

In addition, the EEC has made it much easier for counterfeiters to avoid the strictly-cootrolled distribution channels which used to help control the supply of goods to any given market place. Whereas it used to be difficult to transfer goods from one market to another, today it is much "This makes it difficult easier. to check where goods are made," Mr Carratu said.

He urges companies to vet the distribution of their products carefully and watch for changes in ordering patterns hy retailers who may be switching to alternative, counterfeit, sources of supply.

The Government is also taking the problems seriously and has recently established an anti-counterfeiting unit at the Department of Trade and Industry to investigate. How-ever, there is a feeling within industry that the best chance they have of tackling the counterfeiters is to track down the culprits themselves by hiring their own investigators.

But as one investigator said: "It is a bit like painting the Forth road bridge really. As sooo as you stamp out one problem it re-emerges some where else.

(though a monopoly, as James Bond discovered, could prove fatal).

In contrast to the conventional mercenary, a bought in anchear deterrent might actu-ally be more convincing, since the company, would have no territory of its own and could. therefore, supply the goods if required, without threatening itself with extinction, unlike the sovereign state. Indeed, the company's commercial future would depend on delivery.

Moreover, multi-national companies would enable even tiny states (or territories like the Falklands) to buy fall protection at a cost they could dford without dangerous proferation.

Mogens Glistrop, the martyred Danish campaigner against public spending, sadly duced his case to the absurd by suggesting that Denmark should axe its costly defence programme in favour of a series of tape-recorders round the border, which, when triggered by oncoming tanks, would automatically amounce: "We surrender" in Russian.

How mach more convincing if he had been able to rely on taped measures to the effect that Denmark was insured with the Intercontinental Ballistic Missile Corporation of the Cayman Islands. Practical problems aside, it may seem merely bad taste even to raise such an idea, even if it saved the odd anunal billion.

The message surely is that there is no absolute definition of what is suitable for privatization. For instance, the moves to sell off British Nuclear Fuels or the Royal Ordnance factories might need to be hedged round with so many ercial restrictions . that the excertise would have little economic point beyond dressing up the public accounts. Healthcare via insurance in-volves huge administrative costs. In politically sensitive areas like railways and health, the Government has already opted merely to gain some practical benefits of competition and private sector management techniques. Comm theory, should remain the key to the privatization helped us increase profits in spite of almost unchanged turnover. This policy is clearly paying dividends, and will continue to do so. We have effectively improved our service to Bingo members while reducing the overall price to play at our Clubs. Consequently, we have more than maintained our share of the market.

Fature

The proposal to increase the final dividend reflects the Board's satisfaction with the pre-tax profits earned in the financial year ended 31st March 1983. Profits are better earned from growth than from economies; we shall endeavour to

Crystalate

Crystalate's point-by-point rebuttal of Royal Worcester's defence document neglects lo mention the current value of the hid. Royal shareholders may therefore be under the im-pression that it is still worth 310p a share, the value when Crystalate made its offer. In fact, the mixed ordinary share and loan stock offer is eurrently

However, Royal's share price has also fallen from 305p to 300p on further consideration by the market of just how far off recovery still is. Without doubt the Royal share price is substantially supported by the hid and would otherwise tumble back nearer the 195p level the share traded at when Crystalate's stake was first declared The first closing date of the hid is lomorrow, with little likelihood of substantial accent-

England were last night given the Kiss of Life. Sandor Kiss, one of six Hungarians brought in to strengthen the side humiliated by England a fortnight ago, scored the only goal in their European Championship tie against Denmark in Budapest and threw a cloak of uncertainty over the outcome of Group Three.

Denmark, the leaders, needed to win to end all speculation. Now they must triumph in the more hostile atmosphere in Greece to qualify for the finals in France next summer. The sure assumption is that England will beat Loxembourg, yet to gain a single point, on the same night, November 16.

So much was hanging on this and I could feel my heart beating faster and faster until those last few seconds.

"I couldn't see Denmark winning 1-0. I thought it would be much more than that. With their ability and flexibility, I could not foresee the Hungarians holding them. But they have only themselves to blame for missing those opportunities. It is an amazing result. It has given us a sneaking chance.

RUGBY UNION All Blacks gain Old heads plot a first win with giant's better kicking downfall By lain Mackenzie

Edinburgh New Zealanders

Edinburgh's hopes of becoming e first Scottish district side to beat B New Zealand touring team since the All Blacks' initial visit to this country in 1905, died in the gathering dusk yesterday amid regret that so many penalty kicks were squandered. The visitors, whose pack was well below All Blacks standards, and whose backs of aggressive flair, were there for the Edinburgh, not the strongest of

of the clean lineout ball, with only Borocvitch giving trouble, and were not unduly upset to the tight scrum. Indeed, Brett wilsoo took one strike munst the head but lost two.

Touring sides, the New Zealandtouring sides, the New Zealand-ers included, can make a low key start, and at Myreside Stu Wilson had the task of introducing nine newcomers. Even so, victory by two goals, a try and two penalty goals to two penalty goals was hardly a satisfactory achievement. There is some understandable apprehension to the perty about what awaits them to the perty about what awaits them when they meet the owerful South of Scotland team in Galashields on aturday. Dods is unlikely to miss ax kicks as Steven did yesterday.

Six kicks as showen and yesteroay. Edinburgh began as if they were platying the weakest district side. Pressure was put on the New Zealanders straight from the kick-off. Steven had an early opportunity to put his side ahead from a very biotable construction perturbed kickable penalty, but perhaps oervous he slid the ball well wide.

oervous, he slid the ball well wide. He atoned within minutes. There was a fearsome shove by the Edinburgh eight which almost ended with a pushover, a partial clearance, and an apparently more difficult kick which the Heriot's man obviously found simpler. It was fortunate for the touring team that his kicking was below par at other times. other times. It took 23 minutes for the All

Blacks to struggle into the opposing 22, yet typically, they scored when they did so. With his first dead ball

Steven what to do by equalling the scores without a flutter. Pive minutes later the New Zealanders, still in third gear, let alone overdrive, marked down the first try of the tour, Wayne Smith exposed the inexperience of Irvine's deputy at full back, Hastings, who incid to take the ball through the middle. It went house and a run middle. It went ioose and a run began on the right which ended with Shelford just reaching the line. Deans converted from a wide angle. When the full back added three Blacks standards, and whose backs more points with his third showed only intermittent moments successful kick in a row, the 6,000 who had turned but hoping to set a piece of rugby history written, prepared for the worst. Expectations arose again when Hastings, taking over the kicket's role, struck home a penalty, but they died finally when Brett Wilson was credited with a pushover try. In injury time Deans converted a try by Green

Why the best may be yet to come Cavalier Cecil leaves us waiting for the stilton and port If Benjamin Franklin's observation is at 30, the wit; and at 40, the judgment, why question the decision of Henry Cecil, that raceborse trainer extraordinaire, who at the age of 40 has chosen to publish his autobiography, On the Level (Harrap, 28,50)? £8.50)

28.50)? Cecil is at the peak of a glittering career that in 14 years has produced four championships, over 1,000 winners and £5m in prize money, although as yet no Derby winner. Inevitably, his amusing and informative story is incomplete - it lacks a charge of the stitue and informative story is incomplete – it lacks a satisfacatory rounding-off, like stilton and port after the main meal. He preferred, he said, to put pen to paper while be could still remember his tales, instead of waiting 20 years by when senility might have crept in. By that time, he added, few would want to read it in any rase

Cecil trades in humour as well as horses. He is the master of the one-liner. Tall, with trendy clothes and Alain Delon looks, he enriches the racing scene, standing out to a crowded paddock alongside the regimental tweeds, brogues and battered trilbies.

A non-conformist, perhaps, but racing's cavalier champion has earned the establishment's respect: his list of owners reads like Debrett.

His early years were difficult. Rohays-Cecil, his mother, lost a husband and two brothers during the last war and was left to raise four small sons before marrying Captain Sir Cecil Boyd-Rochfort, a Capitain Sir Cech Boyd-Rochiort, a formidable man who trained horses at Freemason Lodge, Newmarket. Unhappy school days were relieved only by carefree holidays at Crathes Castle in Kincardineshire. Having failed the en-trance examination to Eton, Henry and his twin brother, David, were dispatched to Canford where they spent five years that were "neither memorable, nor particularly enjovable".

After leaving school the two Cecils worked at Lord Derby's Woodland Stud where they formed a close friendship with "Tote" Cherry-Downes, now a successful hloodstock agent. Periods at Mme Jean Couturie's stud, the Hara dn Mesnil, near Le Mans, and Newmarket's Equine Research Station gave Henry Cecil a grounding in horsemanship. Later he worked in the United States and Canada before returning to do a one-year course at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester.

His education completed, Cecil became assistant trainer to his step-father (Uncle Cecil) in 1964. Soon he was united with another powerful racing family when marrying Julie Murless, whose father. Sir Noel, trained at Warren Place. Cecil set up as a trainer in 1969 and the thrill of his first winner, Celestial Cloud, was poignantly described: "There were tears tolling down my cheeks as I stood at the end of the drive, waiting for Julie. When at last she appeared, smiling from ear to ear, I simply jumped with joy as she drive up to me booting all the prov. The drove np to me, hooting all the way. The thrill of knowing I had trained my first winner is something I will never, never forget." When Sir Noel retired in 1976, Cecil, at a generous price, was able to acquire Warren Place. It is a family home he loves, where roses bloom, his two children play and animals abound.

Now, at the crossroads of his career, this sensitive and talented man intends to cut down on his huge stable string. Next season it will be 140 horses instead of 155, small reduction only because of the retention of many senior horses. "I'm cutting back my two-year-old intake to 60, instead of 90. That doesn't mean we will be less competitive, just more selective. I'll have to think about knocking down a few boxes, otherwise Warren Place will look like a ghost town," he joked.

Cecil carries the stresses of modern racing well. 'In the years to come I don't want to gad about as I used to. The stable is no problem, I can manage that. It's the travelling that is the bind. The sales, particularly, are so bectic. "At Keeneland this year, out of an original entry of 2,000, we whittled our requirements down to just eight. It was the same at the Highflyer Sales at Nerwarket - just four. Unfortunately, because they stood out, everybody wanted them, too. I was the underbidder for one at nearly £1.6m. It's frightening. All right, the colt was well bred, but he might be useless. We used to reckon on between £20,000 and £60,000 as a good working price for a horse; now £40,000 is considered cheap."

What of the Arab influence? Cecil believes the situation will settle down shortly. "I'll be training 22 horses for the Maktoum family next season, including the Derby runner-up, Carlingford Castle, and there are some nice young horses among them. But just because yon are training for the Arabs, you must not push aside your other owners. After all, the Arabs might be gone tomorrow." What does concern Cecil is that so many new

Discussing his training methods, he did not accept the criticism that he was hard on his two-year-olds. "Some two-year-olds do not train on into decent three-year olds, so you have to make hay while the sun shines. Remember, too, it is a lot easier to win a top two-year-old race, even the Futurity, than the big group three-year-old races. They are so competitive."

Cecil regretted running Trojan Fen, who finished third in the Royal Lodge Stakes," He went over the top so suddenly, overnight in fact. But he will bounce back next year."

horse of peaks. He wasn't happy, tucked in behind on the rails in the Newmarket race and next season we will run him differently, making more use of him in his

Cecil is much more hopeful that Precocious, Lady Tavistock's unbeaten colt, will be fit after a knee injury to contest the big sprints. "He is very good and has a big future." Alleging, Condrillac and Claude Monet; too, should go into the notebook as lightly-raced colts with got a strong team. It could be a vintage year." But if Cecil does saddle his first Derby winner how about a supplement to his half-finished story? Dick Hinder

The Times Guide to career development Taking business degrees

Mr Robert Haslam, who became chairman of the British Steel Corporation in September, belongs to the emerging group of top British executives who have been to business school. He holds a firstclass degree in coal-mining from Birmingham University, and took Henley Management College's nine-week residential general manage-ment course in 1956, when he was 33 At that time having started 33. At that time, having started as a mining engineer, he was personnel director at the National Coal Board. Four years later, Mr Haslam moved to ICI - an organizatioo which has always been a strong supporter of formal management training - and eventually became deputy chairman. Other dis-tinguished Henley "old boys" include the chairmen of Kodak, the Tioxide Group and Boots. All these men feel they benefited in improved self-confidence and awareness of. wider issues, from their experiences at Henley. However, they would probably have got to their present positions in any event.

Most of the participants in the Henley course are sponsored by their employers. They have already been picked out and groomed as potential star performers. There is probably little point, in term of career advancement, in individuals even contemplating paying the £6,000-plus fee unless they have their sights on an employer who is convinced of the value of this type of course. Many companies still have ambiguous feelings about business schools. Some are downright antagonistic. A prudent middle-ranking executive would do well to test carefully the diplomatic climate in his company before embarking on such a step.

Becoming more widely recognized by companies are the Masters degree in business studies or business administration which is oow being offered by some 42 British universities. One of the first graduates to reach top executive ranks from this fairly oew stable is Mr John Egan, who was appointed chairman and chief executive of Jaguar Cars in 1980 at the age of 43. Mr Egan was a member of the Loodon Business School's first Master class in 1968.

Like those of many MBA's, Mr Egan's career spans experience, before arrived at his present position, with several companies, including Shell, General Mutors and including Shell, General Mntors and Massey Ferguson. Most MBA students fund them-selves from a combination of savings and education grants for the year or two years of full-time study needed to complete the course. The age of candidates, as well as standards, vary between different centres. But at the London Business School, which is reckoned to have School, which is reckoned to have stringent entry requirements, the average age is 27, and after notaining a first degree, students will typically have had four years of practical experience in employment before going to the school. Will the financial and other sacrifices needed to take a full-time MBA pay off? It is still too early to say, but the indications are that it probably will. An LBS survey of 242 out of the total of 1,200 who have graduated so far shows that more than 40 per cent had reached director level or above by last summer. Salaries also tend to be considerably higher after gradu-ation than before. Considering that the first British MBA graduates are only now in their middle forties, the reesults are impressive.

Employing women and minors It may seem something of an anachronism that there should be wishes and at whatever times he wishes.

By contrast, in factories, women and young persons may oot work for more than four and a half hours without having a break of at least half an hour. (Fhey may work up to five hours if a break of 10 minotes is allowed during the period.) Women and young persons are oot allowed to work during the hours of 8pm to 7am. (Calculatioo of the limited overtime allowance is oo a factory-wide basis which itself leads to considerable administrative problems.)

Sundays and public holidays which, so far as men are coocerned. can be agreed between employer and employee as normal days of work or as holidays, are compulsory rest. days for women and young persons (although days off in lieu can be agreed in certain circumstances); maximum hours of work for each day are also closely controlled.

The "sweat shops" where women ooce worked inordinately loog hoors as seamstresses, and other such institutions, are oo longer with us, and the trade unioo system is unlikely to allow such establish-ments to re-emerge. Io industries where' unions are not usually recognized, the wages council system, which provides for minimum terms and conditions of employment in the trades and of a new wave of exploitation. The Factories Act 1961 does allow for the Factory inspectorate to grant exemptions to employers to allow both women and young persons to work during the evenings and on night shift. But although exemptions are readily granted, the process still takes a considerable time and is of limited application: an employer cannot get a general exception from the Factories Act restrictions.

This, in turn, means that unless the factory owner is willing to apply for, and can obtain, exemptions. unless, indeed, he has the time available to do so before the work begins, or before he needs new employees oo a particular job these restricitions, instead of pro tecting women and young people, may well put obstacles in their path. Many people feel that since work is difficult to obtain and there is a diminishing amount of work avail-able, there should be restrictions imposed on the hours of work of all employees in factories and, indeed generally, so that work can be more equitably distributed. The currect restrictions, which are inherently discriminatory, cannot be justified. It might well be thought that a young woman of 17 of a cornal fit woman would generally require rather less statutory protectioo from overworking than some rather less

Grenada fighting as US begins evacuation

arborne division. The first 61 American evacuees left Grenada around midday yesterday, and were being flown to a US Air Force base in Charleston, South Carolina. Other evacuation flights were expected to leave the island late yesterday and today. The State Department said that half the 1,000 Americans on the island wanted to leave. About 600 of themare staff or students at St George's Univer-sity medical school. The two campuses were said to be under control of the invasion force.

There was some dispute, however, over exactly how many Americans had wanted to leave Grenada before the first American troops landed on Tuesday morning.

One of the reasons for the invasion given by the Reagan Administration was to ensure the safety of American nationals on the island. But the school's hancellor and others attached o the university had said the Americans were safe and that most of them did not wish to leave.

The State Department also said the US would evacuate any other foreigners who wished to leave.

The Wedger, Administration has been stung by international criticism of the invasion, particularly by Britain and France. A. State Department spokesman admitted that the action had put a strain on relations with its European allies, but attempted to shrug this off hy saying: "There are always differences withing a closely-knit family".

Mr George Shuitz, the Secretary of State, who is to have talks with the Foreign Ministers of Britain, France and Italy in Paris today, is expected to come in for criticism over the United States's failure to coosult fully with its allies before launching the invasion. However, the main purpose of the meeting is to discuss the situatioo in Lebanon following last Sunday's homb outrages in Beirut.

President Reagan formally notified House and Senate leaders on Tuesday night of the invasion under the War Powers Resolution.

Meanwhile it is unclear now long the American toops will remain on the island once the fighting is over. President Reagan and other members of his Administration said they would leave as soon as possible.

Caribbean: Mr John Adams, Prime Minister of Barbados, claimed in BBC interview yesterday that a decision to invade Grenada had been taken and Britain and US were invited to join in. "They should have been aware of this on Friday," he said.

Saturday United States: President Reagan began seriously considering a military operation after being approached by the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS). According to Senator Larry Bressler, a Republican from South Dakota, officials. consultations with Britain may have been put in train, Britain: Britain told that seven heads of government of OECS had decided to put together a multi-national force and to call for support from friendly governments (ac-cording to yesterday's statement by Sir Geof-frey). Washington informed the Government that it had received a firm request for help. But, Sir Geoffrey said, Britain was told that no decision had been taken in Washington

Britain: British High Commission in Barbados told that a formal request for British participation in multi-national force would probably be handed over later in the day. But, Sir Geoffrey Howe said yes-terday, this did not hap-pen. Instead the Government heard that a meeting of nearly all Caribbean countries in Trinidad (only Grenada was absent) had called for political and economic mearequest. Mrs Thatcher sures rather than military replied by expressing Britain's concern steps against Grenada.

United States: President Reagan took the final decision to invade during the afternoon. Britain: Ministers met in the morning to discuss developements. The Brit-ish ambassador in Washington was structed to put to the US Administration factors which "would have to be carefully weighted". That evening President Reagan called Mrs Thatcher to say he was giving serious consideration to the request. He promised in inform Mrs Thatcher in advance to any decision being taken. While that message was being con-sidered at Downing Street President phoned again to say the he had decided to respond positively to the

Tuesday United States: Early in the morning, United States and Caribbean-forces landed in Grenada. Members of Congress only learnt of British objections to the invasion after Mrs Thatcher's statement in the House of Commons during the afternoon. President Reagan announced details of the invasion Britain: According to Sir. Geoffrey Howe, President Reagan sent a message to Mrs Thatcher informing her that he had taken Britain's reservations on board but that he had decided that US participation in the multinational force would go ahead. The situation inside the remained confused last night. Sir Geoffrey, the Foreign Secretary, spoke twice in an

States were thought to be in control of large areas of both Sir Geoffrey's speeches: But there appeared to be pockets of resistance to the Americans whenever Sir Geiffrey was asked to say whether he actually condemned or approved President Reagan's action in Grenada.

One military success for Sir Geoffrey

Mr Healey, Dr David Owen for the Social Democrats, and for the Social Democrats, and many lesser figures, kept on asking this embarrassing ques-tion. Sir Geoffrey kept on replying that it was possible to have "two views" about the matter, which at least raised the possibility that in parts he was holding out against the American forces, who appeared to have occupied the rest of his two speeches.

rest of his two speeches. Sir Cientifux had ealy one military success during what was perhaps the most difficult debate of his amiable career. He seemed to have found Grenada's Governor General. That high personage had got lost during Sir Geoffrey's answers to questions in the House on Tuesday, when the Foreign Secretary explained that he was "unable to say" where the man was. Now Sir Geoffrey said the Governor General had been found, but preferred not to say where he was at present. One other matter should be cleared up. The Governor General was described by me yesterday as being white. Helpful col-leagues have pointed ont that, like most people in Grenada, he is in fact black. Perhaps that explains why Sir Geoffrey could not find him, there being so many of them about. Mr Healey opened the attack. Making use of all the low arts of which he is a grand master, he gave the Labour benches the first boost to their morale since the general election or possibly since, with the fall of Goose Green, they lost all hope of a British military debacle in the Falk-

Next Mr Healey seized on the hapless Governor General. What had Sir Geoffrey meant the previous day that this personage might have some future constitutional rele to play? At whose behest? "The Governor General is respon-sible to Her Majesty, the Queen, and not the American President," intoned Mr Hea-ley. "Hear, hear," roared all those finatical royalists be-bind him hind him. Mr Healey triumphantly noted the alleged closeness of the relationship which the Prime Minister had claimed with the American president. He ignored the equally close relationship claimed by Lord Wilson with M. Lynden. Johnson, Mr Callaghan with Mr Carter and himself, in foreign affairs debates with all the grandest bores in Washingion. A masterly performance. Sticking to the two views' formula

In the face of this terrible provocation, Sir Geoffrey bravely went ahead with his determination to make him-self look pathetic by sticking to the "two views" formula.

Later anti-Americans dominated the debate. Mr Enoch Powell - quoted Washington on the unwisdom of either hating or loving a foreign country in a powerful speech inspired by his mani-fest hatted of America.
